Introducing The New Blueridge Slope-Shouldered Style Dreadnaught Guitars From SAGA.

San Francisco CA, June 12, 2004 – Introducing the legendary slope-shouldered dreadnought of vintage fame—now back and it’s better than ever!

The new Blueridge BG series from SAGA features the famous “slope-shoulder” design made famous in the 1950’s and is still a favorite of many a player and vintage instrument collector, world-wide. Each model has all the features that make these guitars so recognizable, while at the same time, includes modern and original refinements that make an already great guitar design even better.

The Blueridge BG-160 features a vintage sunburst top made from choice, solid spruce—delicately X-braced for optimum tone and volume, solid East Indian rosewood back and sides, a low-profile mahogany neck with rosewood fingerboard and intricate pearl position marks, a vintage-style rosewood bridge with bone saddle, and a uniquely original peghead shape design with intricate inlays and Blueridge logo in pearl. The BG-140 shares all of the same features listed above with the exception of the back and sides being made from Honduran mahogany.

For the more budget minded musician SAGA, offers the BG-60 and BG-40 who’s wood selection is identical to their higher priced counterparts, with the exception of the backs and sides being made from laminate material. These models also share and the pearl designs on peghead and fingerboard, yet are slightly less ornate.
